Code of Honor

While knowledge and skills are undeniably vital to the people performing medical profession, the integrity should be even more important.
You must establish this integrity as a student. The professional medical community monitors itself to establish trustworthiness and integrity.
For this reason, a student of Medical University will not lie, cheat, steal, or tolerate those who do.
Consider the following before any decision, whether in the classroom, clinic, or workplace:

1) Does the action I am about to perform attempt to deceive anyone or allow anyone to be deceived? Handing in or utilizing someone else's work via electronics or any other form is deceiving my instructor. Grades are assigned specifically to assess my grasp of a concept or skill for future use. If I choose to evade the evaluation or grading process in this way I will not only deceive my instructor but also my peers, my future employer, the patients who will depend on my medical expertise, and the general public.

2) Does this action result in an undue advantage to which I would otherwise not be entitled?
3) Would I be satisfied by the outcome if I were on the receiving end of this action?

The honor code is a philosophy which affects every part of life, rather than a set of regulations for which violators will be punished. Ideally, it should extend to all aspects of a medical professional's life – personally as well as professionally, because the normal habits of the mind (e.g. integrity or honesty) during most situations tend to be the habits shown in other situations – especially when under stress.

The honor code is proactive rather than reactive; its main goal is not to punish but to build the level of trustworthiness and integrity in every member of the medical community.
Student must be trained in the honor code as an essential part of their preparation to practice medicine in an ethical manner.

Application:
At all times I should consciously do the right thing, not out of fear of punishment, but because it is the right thing to do. If I, as a medical professional, show that I cannot be trusted, no amount of skill or knowledge will be useful to others. Because of the level of public trust placed in medical professionals, the honor code is absolutely essential to the medical profession. I acknowledge that trust is nearly impossible to regain once it has been lost, and if I cannot be trusted, I also cannot be tolerated as a member of the professional medical community.
